Governor Phil Bredesen will address a joint session of the state legislature on Monday. The Governor will deliver his draft of the state's budget for the upcoming fiscal year.

Our primary responsibility as legislators is to the people of Tennessee, specifically the people in our individual districts. As we work our way out of this economic slowdown, we have to make sure the budget we pass works to take the financial burden off of working families while still keeping our state solvent for the future.

The Governor usually delivers his budget in February. However, with the delayed passage of the "American Recovery and Reinvestment Act of 2009" in Congress, the Governor requested more time to adjust the projected numbers. Tennessee is expected to receive over $4 billion in recovery resources.

On another matter, I am in the process of developing my annual questionnaire. If you have a question you would like me to ask, please feel free to send it to me via e-mail. I already have quite a few questions, but will be happy to include some from constituents as space permits.

When you receive the questionnaire, please complete it and return to me. The questionnaire is an important tool for representing my constituents.

As always, please contact me if I may assist you in any way.
